THE REPUBLICAN PARTY: TS HISTORY, PRINCIPLES AND POLICIES. Edited by the Hon. JOHN D. LONG. 8ve., pp. 427. New-York: The M. W. Hazen Co.

This is campaign literature of the highest order. Forty years ago voters were dependent upon a poorly-equipped press and occasional visitations of public men for the elements of political education. In a Presidential canvass large editions of a few political almanaes were issued, but no attempt on a large scale was made to inform the country or to convince wavering voters by campaign literature in the form of books, pamphlets and circulars. Now the presses are kept in motion from the beginning to the end of a National election. In place of Mr. Raymond's modest sketch of Mr. Clay in a dozen pages of a "Tribune Almanae," or Mr. Greeley's brief essays on Protection, printed in the manual forty years ago, the a the author of "Ben Hur" writes the life of General Harrison and many of the most conspicuous leaders of the party contribute chapters to an elaborate volume on the history, principles and policies of Republicanism. There are many excellent histories of the Republican party already in libraries and book-stalls, and apparently there was no popular demand for a new presentation of that famous record. There was, however, urgent need of a volume such as this, in which the living issues of American polities are discussed by men com petent to deal with them. Thousands of Repub licans who desire to be well-informed respecting the principles and policies of their party will welcome this book and will consider it a privi-lege to study its pages with painstaking care. The historical chapters in this volume are admirably written. The first, contributed by the Hon. John D. Long, is a comprehensive survey in thirty-five pages of the rise, movement and downfall of parties from the Revolution to the organization of the Republican party. The second, writ-ten by the Hon. Edward McPherson, is an equally lucid and stirring account of the sacrifices, fortunes and policies of that party from 1856 to 1888. Then follow chapters on vital questions of the day: on Public Lands, by the Hon, L. E. Payson, of Illinois; on Pensions, by the Hon. E. N. Morrill, of Kansas; on the Fisheries, by Senator Frye; on the American Navy, by Senator Chandler; or Coast Defences, by Senator Hawley: on the American Merchant Marine, by the Hon. Nelson Dingley, jr., of Maine; on Foreign Trade, by the Hon. J. C. Burrows, of Michigan; on Internal Revenue, by the Hon. Green B. Raum, of Illinois; on a Protective Tariff, by the Hon. William McKinley, ir., of Ohio; on Internal Development, by the Hon, Benjamin Butterworth and F. D. Mus sey; on the Civil Service, by the Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts; on the New South, by the Hon. John S. Wise, of Virginia; on a Fair Vote and an Honest Count, by Senator Ingalls; and on the Future Mission of the Party. by Senator Hoar. The list of contributors is remarkable for strength and ability, and every one discusses a subject which he has mastered. Perhaps the most striking chapter is Captain Wise's, on the New South, the spirit of which can be caught from these extracts:

Wise's, on the New South, the spirit of which can be caught from these extracts:

The New South is really Republican. I do not refer to the fact that if the vote were honestly counted it would show Republican results. I mean that the men who are voting with, and assenting to the stuffling of ballot-boxes for the Democracy to-day are really Republicans in their views, and being such will vote the Republican ticket as soon as they learn, what it takes a little time to teach them, that they cannot give effect to those views in the Democratic party, and as soon as they overcome some lingering prejudices against the name of Republican and the negro voter. All that is necessary to win them ultimately to Republicanism is a broad policy of conciliation. It is idle to say we do not want them. We do. To succeed in the South the Republican party must have more white men than she has ever yet had. So long as the whites are banded together in the South in the Democratic party they will control. They are ready to die before they will yield their government to the negroes, whether under the name of Republicans or Democratis; and until the Republican party can sufficiently recruit itself from the white voters in the South to deprive its victories there of the aspect of a triumph of blacks over whites, it had as well stop trying to succeed: for by fair means or foul, by trickery or by violence, the whites will frustrate negro domination. I do not state this fact approvingly, but state it as it is. There is no trouble about getting this accession of white voters with a proper management. We have principles in exact accord with the needs of the New South, and a thousand times more the whites will frustrate negro domination. I do not state this fact approvingly, but state it as it is. There is no trouble about getting this accession of white voters with a proper management. We have principles in exact accord with the needs of the New South, and a thousand times more attractive than those of the Democraey. The people of the South are becoming eminently practical, and applying themselves to all sorts of new enterprises. The passions and prejudices of slavery and war are fast dying out. The feeling is in favor of a to-day and a to-morrow broad as a continent, and against a yesterday narrow as a section. As they feel that way themselves, they are repelled from a party that insists on past recollections and sectionalism. True, they are in such an one now, but they are not satisfied with it; and as the Republican party becomes more broadly National in spirit, thousands, nay, hundreds of thousands, in the New South who have heretofore been Democrats rather from circumstances and surroundings than from choice will flock to its standard.

Take, for example, the tariff question. In the days of slavery the South had no manufactures. But what do we behold there now? No sconer were her people forced to abandon slave agriculture than all sorts of industries sivaling those of Pennsylvania, mining towns, furnaces, railroads, granite quarries, mills, and factories. In Georgia, every branch of manufacturing, from the most important railroad enterprises to patent medicines of National reputation. In Alabama and Tennessee, the development of a wonderful juxtaposition of coal and iron that has turned their sedge-patches into cities where town-lots sell as high as in Wall Street. And even in South Carolina we find her competing, with her cotton fabrics, for the markets of Shanghai. In this land which a quarter of a century back knew nothing but cordurory roads and water-transportation, railroad-building is progressing with a rapidity putting the busy West to its mettle to keep apace, and the New South they wil protection. The truth is, the South is beginning to find out that it needs Republican principles to achieve its greatest possibilities, at about the same time that the Republican party is 'eginning t. learn how much it needs the South. This is a happy conjunction of knowledge. It shows that the South is be oadening and expanding in every view; and it imposes upon the Republican party the duty of realizing that its principles, so admirably adapted, in the present and the future, to all sections of our land and all its people, are only marred and weakened by that class of persons who feel called upon on all occasions to thrust forward things of the past which are sectional and embittered, however glorious they may be. In the approaching campaign it behooves every Republican, North, South, East and West, whether in antecedents he was a Union man or a Confederate, to unite in making the Republican party what it really is, the only truly stintensely sectional. Let not the Republican party fall into an error so odious.

The following inspiring passage from Senator

The following inspiring passage from Senator Hoar's chapter may also be quoted without dis-crimination against his distinguished associates in the list of contributors, since it forecasts the

in the list of contributors, since it forecasts the future of the party:

We cannot now foresee the great questions of the future, any more than we could foresee them in 1860. But we cannot doubt that when they come, the honest, wise, sale, liberal, progressive American counsel will be given by the party whose history we have sketched, made up of the free men of the free North, from whom such counsel has always come, and that the unwise, unsafe, illiberal, obstructive, un-American counsel will still come from the party whose strength is in the solid South, allied with the liquor-sellers and the criminal classes of the great Northern cities, from whom such counsel has always come.

The Republican party is not a church, nor a conclave. Extending over nearly fifty States and Territories, of varying history, it terests, opinions, and character, it must comprise and tolerate a large variety of opinion in matters non-essential. But it has its creed and its statement of faith, from which no man departing can maintain his Republicanism. That statement of faith is to be found in the Declaration of Independence and in most of our State constitutions. It is that it is the right and the duty of every citizen to take his equal share in the government of his country.

To that end the obligation rests upon the State to see that every citizen has an education which shall fit him for that duty and privilege.

To that end the obligation rests upon the State to pursue such policy as will keep the standard of wages up to the highest possible point, so that the citizen may have the comfort and leisure for himself and the education for his children without which he cannot discharge this duty with intelligence and honor.

To that end the ballot-box must be made sacred and kept sacred. The man who, by fraud or violence, defeats the true will of the people, expressed by a fair majority of equal votes, or who debauches that will by corrupting the individual voter, should be punished by the severest penalties of the law, and made infamous by an aroused and indignant public sentiment.

To that end, polygamy, which destroys the sanctity of the home, must be extirpated.

To that end, the drinking-saloon, which corrupts and debauches the soul and destroys the health of body and mind, must be suppressed.

These are the great essentials of free government. Without all of them the Republic itself cannot long endure. These are the six points of and debauches the soul and destroys the health of body and mind, must be suppressed.

These are the great essentials of free government. Without all of them the Republic itself cannot long endure. These are the six points of Republicanism. That the Republican party alone is to be looked to for their accomplishment will be seen when we reflect how ridiculous and out of place any one of them would seem in a Democratic platform. There are other things also for which we can look only to the wisdom and courage of Republican statesmanship. We desire a dignified and spirited foreign policy, instead of the timid and supplicatory tone which now pervades our diplomacy. We want an administration which is neither afraid to hold the great railroads of the country in check on the one hand, nor to do them full and exact justice on the other. We want an administration that will develop our foreign commerce and our foreign carrying trade, that will build up our navy and no longer leave our coasts undefended. We want life and vigor and health to pervade every part of the country. The Republican party, from 1861 to 1874, the only years when it has wielded the legislative forces of the country, has shown what it could accomplish with the forces of a people of thirty millions in a time of war, when one-third of the country was attempting the destruction of the rest. When it shall return to power in both the legislative and executive branches of the Government, it will do far greater things with the forces of a people of sixty millions in profound peace, dwelling together in unity, North and South divided only by a generous rivalry which shall contribute most to the common glory of their country. America has a destiny even greater than all this. When she shall resume her triumphant march on her accustomed pathway of safety, of honor, and of glory, it will not be for herself alone. She is to be, as ever before, aye, as never before, "the enlightener of the nations, the beautiful pioneer in the progress of the world." The sinking hear

This admirable volume contains at the close a brief account of the last National Convention, the full text of the Platform, and sketches of General Harrison and Mr. Morton. It is handsomely printed, contains a dozen portraits and illustrations, and with an attractive binding, is a book which intelligent Republicans will like to have in their libraries as a valuable work of political
